“a distinctively offbeat way of thinking,
generating off-kilter punchlines that are hard to see coming”

Chortle

“You are unable to hold back the laughs”

Funny Women

“a proficient comedy writer, original and off-the-wall”

Broadway Baby

From working at the Large Hadron Collider to the comedy stage: the unlikely life trajectory of a comedian that dreamed of becoming an astronaut.

If you ever want to go to outer space, the probability of you ever getting the job is 0.0007%. That didn't stop Isa from spending most of her life trying to make it to the International Space Station.

In this stand up show, BBC New Comedy Award finalist Isa Bonachera reveals the extreme lengths she went to for her dream, from building her own Mars Rover to starting a PhD in the same office where British astronaut Michael Foale got his.

A real-life story that starts in a small Spanish town, and involves being part of some of the major scientific milestones of the century, during Isa's time working at the Large Hadron Collider and then at the European Space Agency. An insider view of the best and the worst parts of the scientific world, and how lessons in Physics can affect your personal life.

Isa has now hang the lab coat to become one of the most promising talents of the British comedy circuit. She has a number of accolades under her belt, writes for Comedy Central and performs regularly at the top comedy clubs in the country. The Great Emptiness promises to be “expertly written” (List) and packed with “well-crafted jokes” (Broadway Baby), a unique stand up experience about misguided ambition, broken dreams and the weirdness of the cosmos.
